Did you know ?

St. Maarten was originally called Soualiga, meaning The Land of Salt in reference to the large salt ponds behind Philipsburg. Soualiga is an Arawak word. The tranquil Arawaks were subsistence dwellers living off the sea.

There are no rivers on the island. Both French and Dutch sides have desalination plants. Although expensive there is almost always water to be had on the island. Most houses have cisterns which catch rain water during rainy season August to December.

Did you know ?

The story of the division of the island though off repeated is not historically accurate. During the treaty's negotiation, the French had a fleet of naval ships off shore which they used as a threat to bargain more land for themselves. Between 1648 and 1816 conflicts changed the border sixteen times. However the French came out ahead with more land.

Did you know ?

That before the Partition Treaty was signed, the division of the island was decided in a novel way. Two excellent walkers from either country were chosen, stood back to back on the Eastern side of the island and at the given signal each man was to walk along the shore line until they met on the Western side of the island. A line would then be drawn across the islands interior creating French St. Martin to the North and Dutch St. Maarten to the South.

Did you know ?

Dutch St Maarten covers 16 square miles and French St Martin covers 21 square miles on a 37 square mile island. According to Folklore this is because the French walker did not stop to snooze off the effects of the "Jenever" he imbibed on before the walk. Each man was allowed to down a stimulant of choice before the race. The French man chose wine, the Dutch man chose gin – gin makes one sleepy, while red wine fills one with vim and vigour!

CROSSWORD P19

ACROSTIC P21

"I was a very sickly child - "a very battleground of diseases," the doctors said - and perhaps only lived because the diseases could not agree as to which should have the honour of carrying me off." — Robert Graves, I, Claudius.

SXM

That the island should never be referred to as "San Maarteens"! St. Barth's should never be referred to as "Barts"! Sint Maarten, Saint Martin and St. Barths are the acceptable names. Collectively the two territories are known as "St Martin / St Maarten". Sometimes SXM, the IATA identifier for Princess Juliana International Airport (the island's main airport), is used to refer to the island.
